Announcement: Post doc scholarship in Translational Cancer Research

Scholarship
The scholarship is aimed at supporting a postdoctoral fellow investigating the mechanisms of therapy resistance in acute lymphoblastic leukemia. The project involves investigation of the mechanisms by which acute lymphoblastic leukemia cells display resistance to chemotherapies and thereby identify novel targets for therapy. The project also involves the identification of novel signaling proteins which mediate the drug-resistant phenotype and studies on their roles in both leukemia and in normal blood cells using different cell biological tools. The cell biological findings will eventually be complemented with studies with patient-derived xenografts and mouse models.

Qualifications required
The applicant should not have been employed by Lund University within the last two years in order to be able to receive a scholarship. PhD degree should not be more than three years old at the last day of applying.

The PhD degree should be in a preclinical subject with either biochemical studies involving mouse models or bioinformatics studies involving data mining and large-scale mRNA data analysis or mass spectroscopic studies involving protein phosphorylation analysis. Work experience in the field of acute lymphoblastic leukemia is not required but advantageous.
